"It's a big power circuit, big on brakes as well. It's a very strange tarmac, it's very old, very smooth and that means understanding the tires is crucially important."

"It's true that the last two years it's been really difficult to understand where you need to be with the tires. Just as much for qualifying as for the race."

"It is a very small window."

"It's also I think a harder track than it looks. The layout looks quite simple but actually with some blind corners it's a tricky one that a lot of people make mistakes on."

"It's true. And it's such a short track also that if you are not 100% in one corner, you lose a tenth or something. Immediately you are in a different position."

01:13

"I really have to trust my instincts 100% with the car and just push all out to be really on edge. My favorite part of the track is probably turn 5 and 6. It's just that they are very standard typical long corners; fast corners, but they're really difficult. You need to go in there aggressively, usually there's understeer. Understeer is when I am turning and the car doesn't want to turn, it just keeps on going straight. So there's a lot of that normally."

"It is one of those circuits that are about getting as close to perfection as you can."
